

MULTNOMAH FALLS

Multnomah Falls is the second highest year-round waterfall in the nation. Plummeling 620 feet, the waterfall is fed by rain, snow-melt and underground springs on Larch Mountain.

Multnomah Falls offers one of the best places in the Columbia River Gorge National Scenic Area to view the basalt rock formations exposed by Ice Age floods.

At this historic location you will be able to experience the sights and sounds of this magnificent waterfall, Oregon's number one natural visitor attraction.

The Multnomah Falls Lodge was designed by Albert E. Doyle and the natural stone building was constructed in 1925. In 1939, the City of Portland transferred ownership of the lodge to the US Forest Service. Since the 1940s the lodge at the Falls has been operated by a private company under the US Forest Service Administration.

The Visitor's Center

Multnomah Falls offers a very popular 1/4 mile short hike to the Benson Bridge. Many hikers with a little more time and hiking ability opt to conquer the 1.1 mile trek to the top of the falls. The trail is paved from the base to the viewing platform at the top.

GETTING THERE

The fastest route is to take I-84 to exit 31 (some RV parking). More scenic choices from the West are Troutdale Exit 17 (which takes you up the Sandy River Gorge along the Historic Columbia River Highway/US-30), Corbett Exit 22 (which allows you to visit the Portland Women's Forum Viewpoint and the Vista House at Crown Point) or Bridal Veil Exit 28 and travel the HCRH/US 30 East to the Falls at Milepost 32. The Scenic Route from the East is Dodson Exit 35 West along the HCRH/US 30 to Multnomah Falls.
